

Hirohide Takahashi, MD, is a neurologist and received M.D. from Showa University, in Tokyo.

His training as a movement disorder specialist started at Neurodegenerative Disorder Centre, University of British Columbia, Vancouver B.C., Canada, under the supervision of Professor Donald Calne, in early 1990's.

After returning to Japan, he has been concentrating on the medical management of Parkinson's disease, and also on the surgical management with DBS.

Most recently, he is committed to the education of PWP (people with Parkinson's disease) regarding the necessity of physical exercise and the best medical and surgical treatments most suitable for individual PWP.

He is currently actively engaged with PTs OTs, STs and other health professionals, trying to provide interdisciplinary care to PWP and caregivers in Japan.
